The "Encyclopedia of American Associations", published in 1956, revealed the following:

The American Jewish Committee was established in 1906 and at that time had offices at 386 Fourth Avenue, New York, NY; its purpose was to "combat bigotry, protect religious and civil rights and advance the cause of human rights".

According to the American Jewish Yearbook of 1951, the American Jewish Committee, which was founded in 1906, has an indirect interest in Israel insofar as its interest is in the protection of civil rights for all groups. It was also indicated that the American Jewish Committee was an affiliate of the World Jewish Congress. According to the yearbook, the World Jewish Congress secures and defends the rights, status, and interests of Jews and Jewish communities; it represents its affiliated organizations before governmental, intergovernmental, and other international authorities on matters which affect the Jews.

The Book Review Digest contains the following excerpts from periodicals used as review sources of the books written by BICKEL:

(1) "Unpublished Opinions of Mr. Justice Brandeis"

"Among the voluminous papers he deposited at the University of Louisville, Justice Louis Brandeis did not include his court files. These privileged materials, a vast miscellany of opinions at various stages of preparations, memoranda to and from his colleagues etc, he turned over to Justice Felix Frankfurter, who placed them in the library of the Harvard Law School. From this collection, Alexander Bickel's volume includes ten unpublished opinions. Mr. Bickel, associate Professor of Law at Yale, was at one time clerk to Justice Frankfurter. Accompanying each opinion, which, for one reason or another, never saw the light of day, are his own explanatory comments."
(New York Times)

(2) "The Least Dangerous Branch"

"The purpose of this volume by a Yale Professor of law is 'to have the Supreme Court's exercise of judicial review better understood and supported - and more sagaciously used....Starting with Marbury vs. Madison - which he says gives shaky support to judicial review - the author traces the development and uses of the power, with.... explanations of famous cases.' " (Christian Science Monitor)

WFO 161-4582

(3) "Politics and the Warren Court"

"A professor of law at Yale University argues that ' American democracy is a government of men as well as laws, and politics as much as legal precedent determines whether the decisions of the Supreme Court become the policy of society.... As illustration he uses the decisions of the Court on school desegregation, school prayer, federal aid to education, and political reapportionment." (Publisher's note) These essays have been recast from articles previously published in law journals and in magazines such as Commentary and The New Republic.

Enclosure

New York, N.Y., May 1, 1959.

Hon. JAMES O. EASTLAND,
Committee on the Judiciary,
U.S. Senate, Washington, D.C.

MY DEAR SENATOR: The undersigned, all of whom are professors of law, earnestly urge the Subcommittee on Internal Security to withhold favorable action on S. 3, S. 1200, S. 1301, S. 1303, S. 1304 and 1305, which would, in our judgment, create especially serious problems if enacted. S. 3, with its sweeping approach to the interplay of Federal and State action in related areas, would have unforeseeable impact upon the law, would stir fruitless litigation, and would jeopardize the effective development of national policy.

PROPOSED ANTISUBVERSION LEGISLATION

499

S. 1200, intended to reverse the decision of the Supreme Court in the Nelson case, would revive State sedition laws that in fact add nothing to the Nation's defense against genuine subversion, although they do increase the dangers of haphazard and multiple interferences with unpopular advocacy. State laws that deal with violence and other antisocial activity have not been impaired by the Nelson decision. No reason appears for reviving State sedition laws that have contributed nothing to our internal security.

S. 1301 seeks to forbid the continued Federal employment of a person who refuses to answer "any question with respect to Communist, Communist-front, or other subversive activities or any other matter bearing upon his loyalty to the United States." The bill does not require that the question be relevant to any lawful subject of inquiry, or, indeed, that it be asked by a properly authorized body. The blanket requirement that answers be given to every question of these loosely defined types drastically extends the obligations of Federal employees without any showing of need for so curtailing their rights. We doubt the wisdom of that move.

S. 1303 is intended to overcome the effect of the Supreme Court's decision in the Kent case. It authorizes the Secretary of State to withhold a passport when, on the basis of confidential information "he is not satisfied" that the passport holder's journey would not be "prejudicial to the interests of the United States." We believe that the Supreme Court's decision recognizes a constitutional freedom of movement, and we doubt that the limitation of that freedom by this bill can be justified by the actualities of national security. The broad discretion vested in the Secretary of State, to be exercised by procedures markedly at variance with the traditional concepts of due process, so detracts from the constitutional right to travel abroad that its validity is highly questionable.

S. 1304 is intended to overcome the effect of the Supreme Court's holding in the Cole case that persons in nonsensitive jobs could not be removed from them as security risks upon determinations summarily made without procedural safeguards. The measure creates constitutional issues, and, in our opinion, is not responsible to any need that has appeared during the years since Cole v. Young, was decided.

S. 1305 seeks to reinforce the Smith Act by prohibiting advocacy "without regard to the immediate probable effect of such action." This change is influenced by the Yates decision. The proposal to punish advocacy, regardless of its immediate probable effect, raises grave constitutional questions, because it may limit speech before a reasonable necessity for such limitation has appeared.

No one of these bills seems to us to strengthen the democratic system they are intended to protect. On the contrary, in combination, they seem to us to jeopardize many of the values most highly cherished in a free society. We hope that these bills will not be moved toward further action. We respectfully request that this communication be incorporated in the record of the hearings on these bills.
